GENETIC CARRIER SCREENING

Genetic carrier screening is a test that looks at your genes to determine whether you are a carrier of certain genetic disorders. A positive result tells you with greater than 99% certainty that you are a carrier of a specific genetic disorder, and you could be at risk of having an affected child. If a risk is identified, you may wish to consider genetic carrier screening for your partner, consult with your health-care provider, or pursue genetic counseling. If you are pregnant, prenatal testing can be performed to find out whether your baby has inherited the genetic disorder. We currently offer carrier screening for the following disorders:

Cystic fibrosis (CF) is a genetic disorder and leads to life-long illness. It causes the body to produce very thick mucus that can damage internal organs. It can lead to chronic lung infections, digestive problems, poor growth and infertility. Symptoms range from mild to severe, but do not affect intelligence. On average, CF patients live into their mid to late thirties. About 1 in every 3,500 babies born in the U.S. has cystic fibrosis. Screening of newborns for cystic fibrosis is now performed in every state.

Spinal muscular atrophy (SMA) is a genetic disorder that affects the control of muscle movement. It affects a person's ability to control their muscles, including those involved in breathing, eating, crawling and walking. SMA has different levels of severity, none of which affect intelligence. However, the most common form of the disorder causes death by age two. About 1 in every 6,000 to 1 in every 10,000 babies born in the US has SMA.

No test can detect 100% of genetic carriers. Even if your test results are negative, it is still possible that you could be a carrier of the genetic disorder, but the chance is small.

For the most accurate interpretation of test results, the laboratory needs correct information about your ethnic background, family history of genetic disorders and family relationships (especially paternity).

The decision to accept or decline genetic carrier screening is completely yours.

Your test results are confidential and will become a part of your medical record. Your test results will be sent only to the health-care provider who ordered the test, or his/her agent, unless otherwise authorized by you or required by law. Your health-care provider is responsible for interpreting the test results and explaining them to you. No other test will be performed and reported on your sample unless authorized by your health-care provider.

Before signing this form, I have had the opportunity to discuss genetic carrier screening with my health-care provider or someone he/she has designated. I understand that genetic counseling will be recommended if both I and my partner are carriers. My questions have been answered and I have all the information I need to make a decision at this time.

Food and Nutrition in Pregnancy

Nutrition is especially important during pregnancy, and sometimes it can be hard to afford enough healthy food. We ask all our patients about access to food and provide all patients with information about community resources which can help.

Please tell us if these statements were often true, sometimes true, or never true, by circling your answers below.

|---|------------|----------------|------------|
